The Your Climate Superpowers website – climatesuperpowers.org - is a strengths-based resource created for and with children and young people.

The website invites young people to take a quiz to find out what their climate superpowers are. Then, they can explore ways of using their superpowers by taking on secret missions for learning about climate change, self-care, everyday action and transforming society.

HOW WAS THE WEBSITE CREATED?

This project aimed to support children and young people to share their wisdom and creativity in dealing with climate change.

Thirty-one children and young people aged 12-25 in Victoria participated in a series of 5 workshops to codesign a resource along with researchers. Another 50 young people had the opportunity to contribute with their ideas through a Forum and online.

The project also connected young people and established an agenda for future work on this topic.

WHAT WERE THE DESIGN PRINCIPLES?

The young co-designers helped create the content for the website, and established that it should be:

- Empowering: making young people feel capable of making a difference by helping them identify their strengths,
- Inclusive of young people with diverse backgrounds and experiences,
- Sustainable through a digital format,
- Participatory: developed with meaningful input from young people,
- Transparent about funding and where the resource comes from,
- Engaging with clear language, appealing artwork, and interactive elements, and
- Youth-focused: tailored to young people and reflecting their experiences.
